County Lines is a criminal practice that involves gangs sending children from cities into smaller towns and villages in order to sell drugs to the people living in these areas. It's called county lines because these children often travel from a big city to small towns in a different county, and they use dedicated mobile phone 'lines' in order to contact people for buying and selling drugs. The most common drugs involved in County Lines are typically heroin and cocaine, but other drugs (such as MDMA, amphetamines, cannabis and spice) are also sold. The activity of selling drugs in this way is sometimes referred to as 'going country', as it involves going from the city into the countryside.

Gangs recruit young people into doing the work for them because it means that the gang members themselves can manage the operation from a distance and are less likely to be detected by police.
